Thursday 10-11 (5:10 PM – 7:05 PM)

⋮
Vampires, werewolves, ghosts and apparitions from Bram Stoker, to Francis Ford Coppola and Anne Rice. The course will address issues of vampire and vEmpire (the imperial politics behind vampirism), vampirism and psychoanalysis, vampirism and modernism, vampirism and cinema, queer, gay and lesbian vampires, vampires of East and Central Europe, vampirism and anti-Semitism, vampirism and religion, vampirism and nationalism, history of blood in religion, film and literature, etc.

⋮
The course will discuss the figure of the vampire in cinema and literature (Bram Stoker's Dracula will be read or screened and analyzed, among others; particular attention will be given to the novel as a proto-cinematic medium), as well as the rendering of the vampire in cinema (from Murnau's Nosferatu, to Coppola's Bram Stoker's Dracula, Roman Polanski's The Fearless Vampire Slayers Buffy the Vampire Slayer, and Twilight among others). The course will introduce students to the classics of vampire cinema as well as to the contemporary production in the genre of vampire films, television series, etc. The exact readings will be provided for each class by the instructor over the listserve and/or canvas. No books or textbooks to purchase. There will be however some minor costs involved in streaming films not available in the library, (via Amazon).

⋮
Honors Code and the UF Health Policies will be observed. Attendance and screenings are obligatory. Two class periods missed allowed without explanation, more than two class period absences require official written excuse (such as ORIGINAL medical excuse) submitted at the end of the semester with the final paper, in order not to count against the grade.

⋮
The class will be held in the form of a seminar with active student participation, presentations and class discussions. No final exam. All readings in English. The exact readings will be provided for each class by the instructor over the listserve and/or canvas.

⋮
